A NOTE FROM ME /

WHY ME

When I think about what the Social and Content Coordinator role could look like, I don't picture 'running social media.' I picture telling the story of a company that started with one family restaurant in Barrie and is now three brands wide and growing by the week.

MHRA didn't get here by accident. Stocked scaled from one franchise to a hundred stores. Holy Chuck was brought in because it already had a following worth protecting. YLK & Batter is the newest chapter, and it's still being written. One philosophy runs through all three: build around what already works.

That's what I'd bring to social: create better content, understand what performs, learn from the audience, and do more of what works. My BBA from GLS University and my postgraduate certificate in Digital and Content Marketing from York University give me the creative, customer-facing half of that. My postgraduate certificate in Information Systems Business Analysis from George Brown College gives me the other half: reading the numbers, spotting the pattern, and turning what we learn into the next decision.

I've worked across content, social, outreach, sales, and customer acquisition, and I've also sat on the side of marketing that asks a harder question than 'does this look good?' The real question is 'did this do anything for the business?' Every piece of content should have a job before it gets a caption.

“ Build around what already works. ”

PROOF OF WORK.

Real work. Real impact.

Built on strategy. Backed by results.

1. Missive Digital, Content Writer.

I wrote content for a UK trade-show booth design company where the brief was 'generate inquiries,' not just 'make good posts.'

Result: a 73% increase in inquiries.

Content needs a purpose before it needs a caption.

2. Rewynd Snacks, Sales & Marketing Intern.

Working the distribution and sales side of a consumer brand taught me that getting a product in front of people is only step one. The real questions are who's buying it, why, where they found it, and what brings them back. That's exactly the lens a restaurant group's social strategy needs.

UNDERSTANDING MHRA, RIGHT NOW

Stacked Pancake & Breakfast House began as the Country Kettle Family Restaurant in Barrie in the early 1980s, later reimagined by the Mehra family. Franchising started in 2018 with one location in Orangeville. By 2023, that had grown to 65 stores. By the end of 2024, MHRA had opened its 100th store nationwide. This year brought a new headquarters, a test kitchen, and a push toward opening a new store every week, all in service of becoming Canada's favourite breakfast spot coast-to-coast.

STACKED
PANCAKE & BREAKFAST HOUSE

HOLY CHUCK BURGERS

Holy Chuck Burgers joined the family this past summer, when MHRA acquired a major stake in a small restaurant chain founded in 2011. The plan mirrors how Stacked scaled: apply the same franchise systems and operational playbooks without changing what already works. Over the years, a new Ylk & Batter's home was built around the Yonge Street and Woodbridge restaurants, with franchise opportunities expected soon.

YLK & BATTER
BRUNCH & GOOD VIBES

Ylk & Batter is the newest and most local of the three, a Barrie-based brunch concept built around elevated comfort food and a space meant to feel like home.

A HOMETOWN HEART

Barrie is a footnote in this story, and it's not a footnote in mine either. I live here. It's where Stacked started, and it's where Holy Chuck's newest location and Ylk & Batter's home base both are. That's a hometown-to-national growth story I'd genuinely want to help tell.

THREE BRANDS, ONE HOUSE STYLE

Three brands, one house style. Stacked leans into comfort, community, and momentum. Ylk & Batter is an identity of visual food and discovery, an identity that's still being built. Holy Chuck is attitude and cravings, with continuity being the job right now during a big transition.

THE FIRST 90 DAYS

A THREE-STAGE ROADMAP TO BUILD, TEST & GROW

DAYS 1 TO 30, LISTEN, LEARN, AUDIT.

A full social audit across all three brands: top and bottom performers, formats, posting patterns, comments and DMs as research, and a lightweight competitor watch.

A simple weekly KPI scoreboard goes up immediately, tracking reach, engagement, saves, follower growth, and watch time, so we can see what the numbers are actually telling us.

DAYS 31 TO 60, BUILD, TEST, CREATE.

Each brand gets its own content system: pillars, tone, and recurring formats built from what the audit showed, not assumptions.

I'd test short-form video hooks and lengths, build an influencer list based on genuine audience fit, and run planned shoots that produce several usable pieces of content each, not just one post.

DAYS 61 TO 90, OPTIMIZE, SCALE, GROW.

Winning formats become series. Paid support goes behind organic content with proven signals, not guesswork.

A monthly review keeps the team honest: what worked, why, what didn't, what's next.

By Day 90, MHRA has a real playbook: pillars, voice, formats, shoot process, influencer pipeline, KPI scoreboard, and a roadmap for the next quarter. Not just a filled calendar.

MONTH 4 TO 12

SCALE & BUILD THE CONTENT ENGINE.

BY
MONTHS

By month six, the goal is three brands, three personalities, one content engine, where ideas move from insight to shoot to performance to the next idea, building on what's already been learned instead of starting from zero.

The three-brand portfolio becomes an advantage: a Stacked regular discovering Holy Chuck, a YLK & Batter customer hearing about the Barrie opening.

Beyond the calendar, social becomes a real source of customer insight too: what people are asking for, what keeps surfacing in the comments, useful for menu decisions, promotions, and future marketing, not just posts.

By year one: a recognizable identity across all three brands, a repeatable system that isn't dependent on last-minute ideas, a real creator network, and a content library built from a year of shoots.

That supports what MHRA is already building toward: Canada's favourite breakfast spot coast-to-coast, Holy Chuck's growth beyond the GTA, and an identity for YLK & Batter to grow into.

With real data in hand, the focus becomes more of what works and smarter tests around what could. If Holy Chuck's franchise opportunities land in this window as expected, social becomes a recruitment tool as much as a customer one. If successful, in every week, the content system needs a repeatable 'new store' playbook: countdown content, opening-day coverage, and local outreach, so growth doesn't outrun the content that supports it.

WHY I WANT TO BE PART OF THIS

I'm not looking for a role where I'm handed a content calendar to execute. I want to understand these brands well enough to contribute ideas, be close enough to the numbers to know what's working, and close enough to the customers to know what they actually want.

MHRA has spent a decade proving that growth built on discipline, not just ambition, compounds. I'd want my first 90 days to prove I can be part of that same discipline on the content side.

Let's make people stop. Look. Crave.
Visit. Come back.

The first 90 days is my starting point.
Not my end point.
